Galebreaker Relocates to Ledbury

Galebreaker, manufacturers of agricultural and industrial products, currently based in the Forest of Dean, have purchased and will be relocating to the John Dickinson Building, New Mills Industrial Estate, Ledbury in early summer 2008. The company's new manufacturing base will be renamed Galebreaker House.

A family owned and operated company, Galebreaker are specialists in providing indoor and outdoor fabric technology design solutions to all industries. Galebreaker has been steadily expanding its business both in the UK and internationally and, with no additional space available at the company's premises in Mitcheldean, Gloucestershire, the company began to look for a new site two years ago. To cope with their planned expansion and expected increase in turnover, a freehold site of approximately 40,000 square feet was required. In December 2007 a suitable freehold site in the Ledbury area became available and, following negotiations conducted by the firm's agents, John Goodwin of Ledbury, Galebreaker successfully completed the purchase of the Dickinson Building from the Hamlin Group on the 5th February. Galebreaker's new premises will allow the business to fully embrace its expansion plans, to satisfy its customers demands and to create new business.

Managing Director of Galebreaker, Jeremy Scudamore, said "We have been in Mitcheldean for over 20 years, so of course we are sad to leave. But our current premises are now wholly inadequate and very cramped. By relocating to much larger premises we can continue to grow. We will safeguard our workforce and we will help to give this company and its employees a very positive future. We are all very enthusiastic about relocating and are looking forward to continuing the success of our company in Ledbury"
